Shelton State can be any of several different kinds of colleges. It can be just a commuter campus where students come to school for a few hours then go home, dreaming of the day they get to go to the university.

Or it could be an all-engrossing school for two years where students are involved in many different kinds of activities.

The choice of what kind of Shelton this will be is up to the students themselves.

This is the message that the Student Services area seems to be saying with the promotion of new activities such as student government and cheerleading.

One of the first of the new activities Shelton students have to cheer about is cheerleading itself. Buccaneer cheerleading tryouts are just around the corner, Sept. 19.

Cheerleading sponsor Tracey Branch will coach 12 energetic girls to promote school spirit. The Buc-

Diesel mechanics get big bucks for big job

By Coy Mozingo

While standing in the atrium and observing the feature display on diesel mechanics, Matthew Simpson asks his buddy, "I've never really understood diesel mechanics. What exactly is it?"

Not too far away, at the foot of the western parking lot, sits a large gray building that is the home of the student diesel mechanic and his community.

Upon entering the building, one is greeted with a pungent smell of gas and grease. A hint of dust lingers upon the air and never seems to settle. There are gatherings of students who are cooperating to clean the inner workings of a diesel engine. The camaraderie, the speech and general togetherness that the students share are admirable.

"You wanna hand me that 3/8's wrench," a student eagerly asks.

They toil hurriedly over their work to gain more practice in this challenging field.

The warehouse-like building is packed with diesel engines, each ready to be rebuilt, repaired, or studied. But the engines all serve a purpose: to educate west Alabama's future diesel mechanics.

Nuwan moves boldly

By Jared Adkins

One of Shelton States' newest and most promising rising stars is not a Tuscaloosa native; in fact, he's not even from the United States. Twenty-four-year-old Nuwan Suriyagoda is from Sri Lanka and he's on his way to becoming a world-class chess player.

Nuwan, the name everyone at Shelton knows him by, began playing chess at a young age, being taught by his father, an accomplished player in his own right.

He was noted for numerous accomplishments in his home country, such as being ranked in the top ten players of Sri Lanka for the past three years and being selected to represent Sri Lanka at the World Junior Chess Championships in 1989 before coming to America to get a business degree and continue his dream to be the best he could be at playing chess.

"I love the game; it's very fascinating to me. The complexity and skill needed to be good are very challenging," says Nuwan.

His love of the game is evident. According to Suriyagoda he placed third equal in Class A (competitive chess has three levels: class A, expert, and master) at the National Open Chess Championships in 1998 and was division Class A Alabama State Champion in 1997. He also recently had an impressive 14th place finish at the World Open in Philadelphia this summer. According to Nuwan, the World Open is one of the United States' biggest and most prestigious chess events.

He continues to play as many tournaments as he can afford. He has attended some through endorsements and hopes to obtain more sponsoring in the future for other upcoming events.

Chess isn't just for college students though; it's a game that can be played by anyone anywhere and has been a staple in learned society as long as history has been recorded.

An ancient game of strategy and maneuvers, chess has long been a fascination among college student from every walk of life.

Educators have realized the importance of the lessons that chess has to offer by integrating a chess class in the public school system across the nation.

"We're seeing a drastic difference in the number of scho-

Shelton loses two from its legacy

With the death last week of Joy Dendy, Shelton suffered the second blow its legacy of outstanding instructors and human beings.

The first was Sankey Sherer who died in July. A compassionate and passionate chemistry prof, Sankey saw many a terrified student through his science requirements—never tiring of personal tutoring and encouragement.

He was also a noted Faulkner scholar who loved to share his collection of works and memorabilia to all interested parties.

Joy Dendy was one of the initiators of Shelton's reputation as an effective provider of musical education. She taught choral music at Shelton for five years.

Dendy, a lifelong Tuscaloosa resident, was omnipresent in the musical life of Tuscaloosa for many years, forming and directing musical groups in college, high school and the community.

As outstanding exemplars of the college's legacy, they will be greatly missed.

And, behold, there was a light...

If this sounds a little familiar that's because, as the Shelton State Courier pointed out way back in our fifth issue during the spring, we have been needing a traffic light here at the new campus for quite some time.

New developments at the city council may finally yield a solution to the everyday grind of getting to school.

As reported in the Tuscaloosa News.....

An agreement between the Alabama Department of Transportation and the city may signal the end to traffic headaches near the Shelton State Community College campus.

The Tuscaloosa City Council voted unanimously Thursday to approve an agreement with the State to install a traffic signal at the intersection of County Road 95 and the access road to Shelton State Community College.

Traffic at the intersection is known to back up almost to the Taylorville Corners shopping center between 7:15 a.m. and 8 a.m. as parents and students of Shelton, Hillcrest High School and Englewood Elementary School jockey for space heading onto the three respective campuses. Hillcrest Middle School is also in the area.

The choke point is the four-way stop where Mae Hinton Boulevard intersects Old Highway 69 South at the Shelton State entrance.

The city started working with Shelton and State officials as early as March to correct the problem, but working out the details of the agreement proved difficult, and it was only this week that a solution was agreed upon.

No date has been set for the signal's installation.

"We wanted to get this done before the school year started in August," said Councilman Joe Powell.

Shelton State is the perfect place to see how you might like to major in mass communication for your Bachelor's degree. We currently offer three courses that will give you a good taste of not only what a major in a mass communication field is like but will also give you a taste of the profession you may want to enter one day.

MCM 100 Introduction to Mass Communication

This is the overview class that anyone who might be thinking of a mass comm major will want to take right away. The course gives students a good introduction to each of the professional fields involved in the major: advertising, public relations, television, radio, motion pictures, magazines, newspapers, and books. The classes, however, are not a series of dry discussions. For each area, a professional in the field is brought in so students can get a first-hand account of what the life is like. The course is open to anyone who would like to find out more of how the mass media influence our daily lives.

Clips are what count!

If you are majoring in any of the mass communication fields (journalism, advertising, broadcast & film, etc.) you should know that experience is what counts. No matter what your intended field is, you can get the experience you need to get a job by working on The Shelton State Courier, a professional newspaper about the college and its surrounding community.

Students may wish to participate in the following positions:

- copy/news editor
- sports writers
- photographers
- artists, designers, and cartoonists
- columnists
- circulation/marketing

Get the experience you need for the job you really want.

Call 391-2278, if you have something to contribute to your Courier.

Future Issues

The Courier looks forward to seventeen more issues this school year: two each in September, October, November, February, March and April; one each month is scheduled for December, January, May, June, July and August. Let us know what you would like to know about Shelton by calling the publisher at 391-2278.

The Shelton State Courier is a "campus newspaper" written and produced with the help of students.

Among other functions, it is intended as a vehicle for student expression and all students are urged to participate with submissions of written and artistic material.

The college seeks to fulfill the statement for academic freedom in working with the students in the production of this paper:

lastic players—pre-college level education—in contrast to the adult members. The kids outnumber the adults about 300 to 100. This wasn't true ten years ago when adults were the primary players, so there's a big push to get more kids involved earlier. This year I'm offering a chess class to kids K-12 at Chaffee Elementary here in Huntsville, and we're hoping it'll be a big success," says Bill Melvin, President of the Alabama Chess Federation.

Tuscaloosa may soon be joining the rest of the education establishment by offering their own chess class to K-12 grades with Nuwan as the instructor. The Tuscaloosa County Board of Education is currently looking at a proposal to introduce chess into the elementary level schools in the county. If approved, it will be the first time chess has been taught in the public school curriculum here in Tuscaloosa.

According to Nuwan, his most recent meeting with the board was very positive. "It's not formally approved yet, but I'm hearing very good things about what we may do," says Nuwan.

Currently ranked around 25th in the state according to Melvin, Nuwan is very close to obtaining his expert status. At 1,998 points, he needs only one more win to break into the expert level at the young age of 24, which would add to his already impressive list of chess accomplishments.

As a student of Shelton State and after having had to deal with the anxieties of coming from another country, Nuwan has proven himself to be a master of competition and survival.

caner cheerleaders will begin cheering at the first game to be held Nov. 19, Branch said.

The cheerleaders must maintain a grade point of 2.5 and must be a full time student. The selected girls will be given full or partial scholarships.

Branch also said, "The squad hopes to be participating in cheerleading competitions in the near future."

The cheerleaders will not just be cheering, but will help with orientation and other school-sponsored events.

Former Shelton cheerleader Kristy Mapp, who is this year's coach said, "I am very excited about working with the cheerleading squad this year and I definitely think that the squad will help pep the team up to many wins."

Another student activity is Phi Theta Kappa, an honor society sponsored by Brenda Ryan, Tracey Branch, and Linda Grote.

Ryan loves the idea of working with energetic and bright students. The purpose of Phi Theta Kappa is to honor students who have a minimum of twelve credit hours, and must have a 3.5 GPA.

Phi Theta Kappa member Leann Jones said, "It is a good experience for students and teaches leadership skills."

Phi Theta Kappa not only participated in Get Involved Day '98 they were also the sponsors. This event encouraged the students to take advantage of all the organizations that are available for them to join.

The African American Cultural Association is a community service group. This year's group plans to closely work with Stillman College and The University Of Alabama. Their projects this year will focus on fund-raisers, kids, and the elderly.

Vice President Melissa Elliot hopes that the group will gain more active members.

This group of hard working students continually gives back to their community while feeling a sense of pride about giving to people who are less fortunate than them.

By popular demand the SGA is making a comeback! The foundation of any active student body is the student government. Shelton is still trying to decide what kind of student participation to look for, so the students themselves are in a position to structure the very foundation of the organization.

All eligible candidates must be a full time student and have a GPA of 2.0 for the officer positions and the president must have a 2.5.

Dean of Students Humphrey Lee said, "This program is structured to give the students a way of expressing their opinions, to ensure that the voices of the students are heard."

The first meeting will be in the atrium on Sept. 14. Lee plans to encourage students to participate in all school-oriented organizations and adds-- if the students want things to happen they have to be the ones to develop it.

Cover charges for the bars vary from $1 to $5. On average, it will be about $3 at each place.

The bands start around 9 p.m., and the crowd should fill in by about 10 p.m.

The Booth requires patrons be 21 to enter. This is a good place to go to listen to laid-back music. There are good drink specials throughout the week here, and, usually, there is a good crowd there—but not a huge one. All of the bands are talented and play well together. Arizona Quints and Bir Brother Blues are the main attraction.

The Tusk requires patrons to be 18 to enter. This is one of the larger bars on the strip. On Friday and Saturday you can expect a huge crowd. The stage in front will be open as well as the stage in the back. On a scale from 1-10, I give Mel and the Party Hats a 10. You need to watch this band. They play lots of 80's songs. You can not forget about Close Proximity, this is also a great bend. You will enjoy all of the bands and know most of their songs.

Harry's requires one to be 21 to enter. This is the oldest bar in Tuscaloosa. Tuesday night this is the place to be. Wayne Mills is a very talented guy. He plays lots of different music, from country to rock. He is one of the most talented musicians you will hear in Tuscaloosa. Harry's band line up is great throughout the week. This is a great place to play pool, socialize with friends, and enjoy live music.

Where ever you choose to go out; you will enjoy these three places. The school year has just begun so get out and relax with a night out on the town. When you want to hear live music and be at a place full of college age students, the Booth, the Tusk, and Harry's is your best bet.

Under Crofton, dance department making new, smooth moves in new campus and new theater

Shelton State's Dance Department steps up to the stage this year with student performances and dance concerts to be staged in the new Bean-Brown Theatre.

A new beginning Ballet class (PED 161) began this fall and is instructed by Mrs. Louise Crofton, director of the Department of Dance.

Crofton was intensively trained at the Royal Academy of Dance in London, England in all areas appertaining to the teaching of classical ballet, including anatomy, music, art, international dance studies, choreograph and Labanotation.

Additionally, Crofton had extensive training in modern dance and has trained with many internationally recognized dance teachers including David Howard, at the Gus Giordano studio in Chicago, Illinois.

In addition to serving as a learning center for future students, the Dance Department provides cultural enrichment to elementary and older school children visiting the area.

Five former dancers from Shelton State further extended their training by auditioning and being selected to participate in summer dance intensives.

Julie Ann Burant and Anne Elizabeth Jay participated in the International Dance Festival in Jackson, Miss.

The American Ballet Theatre Summer Intensive in Tuscaloosa accepted Maggie Page and Alissa Metzger.

Julia Apodaca danced in the summer program sponsored by Ballet Magnificat! in Jackson, Miss.

Shelton State encourages new dance students to drop by and check out the department.

that requires 55 semester hours of study at Shelton State. There are a series of courses offered at Shelton that are required to attain a diesel mechanics certificate. DEM 104 Basic Engines, DEM 123 Pneumatics & Hydraulics, DEM 125 Heavy Vehicle Drive Trains, and VTE 101 Technical Communication Skills are just a few of the required courses.

The students learn all there is to know about the wonderful world of diesel. This program trains students to remove, repair, install and maintain diesel engines that power heavy trucks, busses, boats, and contracting equipment. The principles of diesel engines are taught and reinforced in lab exercises using actual diesel equipment. The most emphases is placed on diesel engines, but all others components of equipment and gas engines are covered.

Dean Britt Turner says that John Speights is doing a great job with this program. Turner believes that the need for diesel mechanics will remain constant. He would like for more students to become involved with this program because of its many benefits (job availability, good job placement, and a very specialized and focussed career). "Diesel mechanics is a great field to get into. The wages are anywhere from 15 to 16 dollars per hour and there's great job availability," Turner says.

Barbering program really cut it in the summer

The Shelton State Barbering program was very busy with hair over the summer.

Students in the class were visited by Bruce Smith of Meadowbrook Barber Shop, who owned one of the first barbering schools in Tuscaloosa. Smith instructed the students on preparing and cutting hairpieces.

Raymon, a barber from the Style Connections Barber Shop, visited the barbering program to demonstrate clipper cutting techniques.

Style Connections is one of many barber shops in the area and is located in downtown Tuscaloosa.

The Barbering salon management class also visited Vibrant Touch, owned by massage therapist Patricia Stroder.

Stroder discussed sole-proprietorship types of ownership with the class.

Tony Lee, loan officer with the Bank of Tuscaloosa visited the salon management class to assist the students in obtaining information on business loans and writing business proposals.

In addition to the students, other personnel of Shelton State Community College assisted the barbering class by conducting mock interviews to help the students prepare for their first quest for a professional position.

The summer class had eight examinees who took the barbering exam and passed.

Jimmy Maddox, a former student, who is now employed at Northport Barber shop, was also a guest speaker during the summer semester.

In addition to instruction of the class, Toni Love, the class instructor, also attended the International Beauty Show in London, England at the Alexandria Place.

While at the beauty show, Love attended haircutting and hair extension classes.

Love also managed to view the Bronner Brothers International Beauty Show in Atlanta, Ga., where she attended an advanced haircutting class by Pivot Point and a European hair-styling class.

BULLETIN BOARD

Shelton State looks to help students become better readers

Recognizing the need for students to be able to better understand what they are reading, Shelton State will now be offering two classes on instructing students how to read effectively.

Developmental Reading II and III (RDG 084 and 085) are courses designed to help someone who has basic reading skills. These classes instruct the student in reading comprehension, expanding vocabulary, increasing reading rate, developing study skills, and writing reviews.

Critical Reading for College (RDG 114), for the traditional student, is now being offered to students at Shelton State who want to learn how to increase their reading rate, to expand their vocabulary, and to improve comprehension skills.

RDG 114 is a college credit course and will transfer to most four-year institutions.

Sept. 8th was National Literacy Day

National Literacy Day, sponsored by the International Reading Association, was held Sept. 8. This year's theme was "Literacy takes you places."

Reading is "understanding" print. Three major factors lead to becoming a proficient reader: vocabulary, comprehension, and speed. Do your vocabulary and reading skills impede or expedite your reading ability?

Shelton State and the Courier urge everyone to take a few minutes out of their schedule and read a few pages out of a book out loud to a friend you may know. Help bring the joy of reading into someone's life today!

MTV has taken a shine to one Shelton student and is considering using him for either its popular Real World or Road Rules TV shows. Justin Kenny, a first-year music and wellness student, was driving around last Saturday when he heard of auditions at the Varsity. He was interviewed by three MTV representatives and the next day was called in for a videotaping session. He said he didn't expect to hear the final word on selection until October.

Behind Closed Doors

Did you ever dream that the type of scandal facing President Clinton would happen in your lifetime?

What a mess we have here....America is showing her red, white and blue and that's not all! In this day of the internet, you can find tons of info (including special prosecutor Kenneth Starr's report to congress) on the Presidential scandal, so for those of you that have been licking your chops to get the info, now is your chance. What surprises me about the whole situation is how apathetic America is about this messy scandal. Most of America seems to fit into three categories: those who still believe that the President hasn't cheated on his wife (believe it or not they're out there), those that believe the President was a rotten apple to begin with (but didn't feel strongly enough to pick from another tree), and those who just don't care one way or another (now theirs a comforting thought for future America). Does the President have any remorse over what he did? Do any of us seem to care about our actions the way we should? Clinton surely doesn't seem to care, he's all smiles and waves. To be quite honest, I think that the President and everyone else has the right to do what they want to do behind closed doors and live the way that they see fit. But maybe that freedom has caused we as a society to forgo any trepidation about what we do. The bottom line is that everyone should be held accountable by themselves to what they believe to be morally right. In the Presidents' case, it would not take a rocket scientist to know that the President of the United States would have a hard time hiding things, especially when there are millions of people watching his every move. You and I are not that tightly scrutinized but maybe we should be in a way. Freedom is the most basic right that we as Americans turn to in our everyday life even if we don't realize it. But in society, some ethical and moral rules have to apply to everyone to keep us free.

Kalindy Moncrief-Mass

Letters

I feel like the way things are now in society it's just not terribly uncommon for something like this to happen.

Unfortunately in this sense, President Clinton is just a typical human being living in the 90's, who lied about what he did and now has to scrambling to cover up his tracks. The fact that he lied under oath should be the main focus.

He knew he would get in trouble for that no matter what he did; he just didn't care. It's ridiculous for a man in his position to be gallivanting around like he has been when the whole world is watching him and us. I think Miss Shell is right, If he was going to do something like that, he should have been more careful about who it was he was going to mess around with, not just any intern who walked the halls.

I have to agree with Miss Shell's opinion about the Presidential scandal. The fact that the President of the freethinking world would stoop so low as to have an affair with an intern is utterly amazing. Society as a whole is supposed to be reflected in our President, maybe that's just what has happened and we just don't want to face that the guy we elected is the guy next door, or the guy next to us on the couch. Presidents are supposed to be more than that though. Their supposed to be held to higher standards than the average Joe. I believe that what people do in their bedrooms is their own business and should remain that way according to their beliefs, but what Clinton did wasn't in his bedroom; it was in one of the American people's greatest landmarks, and it was while he was on the clock working for us. To make matters worse, he then lied about it on the stand in front of everyone, which has now cost us a reported $40 million to prove. Good grief, how many homeless people could have been fed if you had just told the truth, Mr. President?

Sports Roundup

By Paul Gonnering Meeks Wins Individual Crown in Golf Tourney

The Shelton State mens' golf team completed its first tournament, held at the University of Alabama's golf course, and tied for second place. The highlight for the Bucs was the 145 score turned in by freshman Chad Meeks, good for individual title in the tournament. Meeks shot a 68 in the second and final round.

Wallace State of Hanceville won the tournament with a 598. Shelton tied with John A. Logan, out of Illinois, with both teams shooting a 601.

"I am very pleased with the effort that our boys gave," said golf coach Jim Collins. "Every player on the squad loves to strike the ball, but our short game has got to come together--chipping and putting win tournaments." Collins continued, "I am very optimistic. We have lot of talent."

The Bucs' next golf match is at Hidden Meadows in Northport, September 21st and 22nd. Shelton State will host the Southern Junior College Tournament, if the condition of the greens will allow play. "We had a very hot summer and they have been struggling to maintain the bent grass greens," stated Collins. "We might have to reschedule the tournament."

Injuries Plague Womens Soccer Team

The Lady Bucs soccer squad got off to a shaky start this fall, currently sporting an 0-3 record. The problem has been injuries and sickness," stated Coach Arthur Howington. "For example, Becky Whitehurst, one of our top players, went down with a torn ACL. She is rehabbing her knee now, but we're not sure about her chances of returning this season."

Coach Howington said he still had high expectations, and that in the second half of their last game "the girls finally started to come together. If the rest of our players stay healthy, our chances are still very good."

Womens Basketball Coach Interviews Soon

Applications for the head coach position for the Bucs womens basketball team are due in by September 11th. "We will be interviewing the first of next week," stated a busy Dean Humphrey Lee, "and we will try to have a decision by September 15th." Chances are still very good."

Women's Fall Softball Season Underway

"Practice is going well. We look forward to a good season. We have depth in most every position," Coach Bobby Ussery stated when asked about the progress the womens softball team is making. "We will be playing 2 home games this fall," Coach Ussery continued. "These games are to be played on the weekend. Hopefully this will allow an opportunity for our student body, faculty and staff to support our team."
